

TYPICAL FORTY-NINER.

AT MARSHALL HALL.

The Forty-Nines Have Their Annual Shad Bake With Col. Joe McElroy.

Way back in 1849 large numbers of enterprising pioneers from all over the country packed their bags and headed for California. Some went across the continent in prairie schooners, some went all the way around the horn. All were firm in the belief that directly upon their arrival they would pick up great chunks of gold and pay dust by the bushel. Some of them did and some did not. Some of them stayed and got rich and some of those who stayed are out there still, trying a hand with Dame Fortune. A good many of them, though, came back east, realizing that after all this is a pretty good part of the world.

THESE STILL CLING TO EACH OTHER.

Wherever they may be, however, and whatever the occasion may be those old pioneers of '49 have a bond of sympathy and fellow feeling that unites them as only the memory of common dangers endures and distinguishes them from others. When they gathered together for a good time they had it, and all, and it is hard to believe that any of them were old enough to travel alone as long ago as 1849. There are quite a number of old-timers in Washington, D. C., the descendants of the original arrivals and third backs at Marshall Hall. More than 150 went down on the two trips of the Macalester, for in addition to the real pioneers there were a number of guests who were forced to come to be invited to go along. They were even declining such an invitation if he could possibly help it.

THE FIRST BOAT LOAD OF MEMBERS.

The 10:30 boat took a large crowd down the river and as the boat passed the arsenal Gen. Gibson, who was with Gen. Fremont in his first occupation of California, honored them with a salute of thirty-one guns, California being the thirty-first state admitted to the Union. At the rear of the boat down the river the Third Artillery Band, stationed in the arsenal wharf, played "Auld Lang Syne."

A little after noon the handsome new dining room that has been erected at Marshall Hall will be open to the public for the first time and a substantial lunch will be offered in opposition to the meals that many of them enjoyed or rather endured in the dining rooms forty years ago.

THE SECOND BOAT LOAD.

A second boat load went down a little after 3 o'clock and all the argonauts who could not go to the second trip. As the reinforcements reached the wharf where they met by the older pioneers, who had been up since 4 a.m. with their earnestness and good intentions the old refrain about "the miner, a forty-niner, and his daughter, Clementine." It was a beautiful
